

Exploration 2
9.14-9.17 (base Shanghai)

鲁迅公园&宜川公园

The rain is too heavy that water soaked raincoat and make it stuck to the body.

When we explored in heavy rain, we all covered in raincoats. And when wearing the hat, the sound of rain immediately became very loud.

Setting on the rocks, the suddenly shaking feeling bring by the subway is really disturbing

The rain soaked the peach gum on the tree and make it more bouncy than before.

(Although peach gum is common in dessert, itself is just gel-like and not sweet at all)

There is a rapid flow of water on the oleander trunk. Touching the water flow is really a good way to relieving stress.

New lifes after raining?

The decomposing process also happened on living creatures(to some extent hurt them)while bringing life to other creatures

The weather change also may bring negative impacts on their daily life

But all these things are part of nature... So to what extent can impacts brought by human's activities be regarded as nature friendly?